

1 | INFLATION

Thirty-four per cent say inflation is one of the three biggest issues affecting their country. While the cost-of-living has been the number one concern in our survey since April 2022, worry is falling. The last time concern for inflation was this low was April 2022 (33%).

Argentina remains the most concerned country, where it has been since November 2022. However, the gap between Argentina and other countries is narrowing. In April 2024, Singapore is the second most worried country about rising prices with 61% choosing it as an issue, up ten percentage points compared to last month.

The US is now the fifth most concerned country with 45% choosing it as worry. In February, concern about inflation had fallen to 39%, the US's lowest figure since spring 2022, but worry has now risen for the last two months.
